Because of the many different files and folders that exist on your computer, it may sometimes be convenient to password protect some of them. For example, you may want to password protect important files or folders containing personal information or sensitive data. You could even password protect some of the files or folders in the Recycle Bin. However, if you're protecting multiple files or folders, it can be quite a pain to have to log in to your system, open File Explorer, and then manually open each one. Also, some of the files may be hidden, which means you would have to dig through the folders and find them. Now that is a lot of effort. An easier method is to password protect the entire drive. In doing so, you can choose one folder on your drive and password protect all of the files and folders within it. Such an approach can be very useful when you want to make a single folder inaccessible to everyone in the system and you can simply create a special folder and put all your precious documents in it. So, instead of having to put all of the files and folders in the Recycle Bin, you could put all the important files and folders in a password protected special folder. However, you would still need to put sensitive data in folders that are not password protected. For this, you could use a disk encryption software that can help protect your data while it's stored in the PC.
