N/A Change log: 25/03/2020 Fixed major bugs in the application.They won't give up easily! President Obama's "My Brother's Keeper" initiative could learn a thing or two from this Bloomberg report that nine black males were apprehended this week, in what appears to be an effort by federal authorities to let the public know that these people were not simply "losers" or "felons," but will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. "If you are targeting young black men, a lot of the parents are devastated," said Gail Johnson, founder of the advocacy group Power.org. "People are hurting and they're thinking about their kids." Said one of the men at a news conference at the Metropolitan Detention Center in Brooklyn, N.Y., "I just want to apologize to my family and everyone else for the wrong that I've done. And I just want to be a role model to everybody." Johnson pointed out that these men had the advantage of two parents who were in the spotlight — former President Obama and

Michelle Obama — with the former president and his wife Michelle Obama campaigning hard on behalf of "My Brother's Keeper." "If you think of all the black men that you know, you think of Barack Obama and Michelle Obama," Johnson said. "And even though they're not known for speaking on behalf of black youth, they are." Last night, while Michelle was at a Broadway performance, Barack Obama was getting ready to attend a "My Brother's Keeper" rally. By all accounts, he did a pretty good job of selling his message to a largely white audience in Washington, D.C. "He was very direct and he was very forceful in his delivery," said Mr. Johnson, president of Power.org, which advocates for criminal justice reform. "He's someone who gets his message across very well, and I think that he's someone who's trying to make a difference." Another activist, Desmond Meade, wrote the following on his Facebook page: "I'm proud to be a black man in the most racist country in the world, but I am not proud of the fact 2edc1e01e8
