Btn1: Turn on/off edge detection in Photoshop Btn2: Turn on/off edge detection in Photoshop Btn3: Set the edge threshold Btn4: Set the brightness level Instructions: Click the thumbnail image to the left. Select Edit Mode Press Btn1/Btn2/Btn3/Btn4. This script extracts the user's age from a JPEG or JPG image based on the average color of the face in the image. It works by analyzing the pixels of the face and looking for a high density of red, green and blue. KEYMACRO Description: Age:Age extraction by detecting color distribution (RGB) of face Instructions: Select the image you want to extract the age from. Highlight the area that you want to analyze by using the magic wand. Click on File > Scripts > Extract Age. Extracting the exact hour from an image is not the most elegant way to get the correct time from a photo. There are a variety of other methods of extraction, but this is a simple and most useful way to get an accurate time. Simply paste the script into a new text editor, paste the following line (assuming you have a stock image of the correct size) and save it to disk: Regardless of what you are trying to extract, please follow this set of instructions carefully. Extracting a Digital Clock in a JPEG image, even in a random photo, is easy with JavaScript code. To get an accurate reading of the actual time, we need to use several pages of code. Here are the steps: Step 1 - Get the Image URL Go to the webpage containing the image that you wish to measure. Make sure the image is in the center of the screen. Hold down CTRL and press the "c" key to open the HTML document. A dialog box will open and show the URL for the image. It will look something like this: Step 2 - Get the Dimensions Open the JavaScript panel and paste the following line of code: Note: As the image gets bigger, the accuracy of the reading decreases, so the script must have a chance to process the image before the reading starts. For this reason, the URL of the image is stored. This will be the only operation that will run on the image. After the code is complete, the image is hidden. You will then click on the image
