

Sutarfeni Buy Online

I had tried SutarFeni from other places till now, and it tasted very average or below average and nothing special. Then one day, a person on social media mentioned about SutarFeni from Khambhat. So I just googled it and found a place to order online. After having this, I felt like it was my first time eating SutarFeni! It just melted in my mouth, unlike others which I had tasted. Amazing quality. So now I know, if we want to have SutarFeni, then it MUST be ordered from Khambhat only. Sutarfeni is an intricate melt-in-the-mouth Indian sweet made from soft vermicelli nests, sugar syrup and mixed nuts. This easy sutarfeni recipe is made from ready-made Kataifi pastry dough and baked in the air-fryer for quick results that taste and feel just like shop bought. It is so simple to make sutarfeni vegan. Simple swap the ghee for coconut oil. Ghee only makes up a small proportion of the ingredients and melted coconut oil or even melted vegan butter will work as a perfect alternative. Air fry the kataifi for 3 minutes but turn the sutarfeni after 2 minutes so that it cooks evenly at the base and prevents the top of the pastry from going golden. Remember, we want the pastry to remain white in colour as this is key to sutarfeni. For sutarfeni, we need a thick sugar syrup that has been cooled. We used a ratio of 1 cup of sugar to 1 cup of water and want to achieve a 1 thread consistency. For flavouring, we added a pinch of cardamom powder. We have a wonderful Middle eastern store in the city and I have to see if I can find the pastry to make sutarfeni. I love adding some flavored milk over the crunchy pastry and relishing them. Looks so tempting and they are so easy to put together. Hayley, I love sutarfeni. Reminds me of the sutarfeni we use to get from Supreme or another sweet shop in Nagara, Nairobi. I will have to look for kaitafi pastry at a Middle Eastern Store so I can try this out at home. Such beautiful clicks too. Growing up, Parsi Dairy Farm on Princess Street, Mumbai were the purveyors of the best sutarfeni in town. Over the last couple of decades, Dayaram Damodar Mithaiwala, or simply D. Damodar at the Dadar TT Circle has caught up with the hallowed Parsi Dairy. All family and friends swear by D Damodar. The only way to put this controversy to rest was to actually go to both places and try out their sutarfeni. A hazardous task indeed, but someone had to do it. After munching on sutarfeni at both places and washing it down with mitha lassi, the verdict is in. Flaky, nut-topped sutarfeni, fat Parsi jalebis, the toffee-like Milk Drops. Mava fish with beady red eyes that swim across the city every Parsi New Year. The popular kulfis that, when we were in college, always provided an irresistible excuse to bunk class, just as Rustom Ice Cream at Churchgate, that other beloved and eccentric Parsi brand, ensured that school sports days at Brabourne Stadium were spent on the footpath, munching raspberry of walnut crunch ice cream served between two wafer biscuits.
